INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND TITLES

OXFORD

PRINTED FOR THE BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS, 1920

Numbers in pencil in margin refer to Bibliographical Notes in Manual to 1400. As a rule these items need not be treated for XV century.

All items in Five Supplements to Manual are marked in margin.

All items in this Vol. II have been checked up with their MSS. in Vol. I for date of their MSS. (see pencilled notes of dates after each in this copy of Vol. II), so showing which items are after 1400 -- EXCEPT the following -- North. Homily Collection, South Engl. Legendary, Bokenham, Lydgate, Ludelay, Hoccleve, Chaucer, Ryman, Scottish Legendary

All of the author's names and refs. to same given in the Index to this Vol. II have been carded.

Items referred to by Title in Index of Vol. II that are marked with black pencil check ✓ in the Index margins are carded by title on small cards.

Items marked in left margin with red mark are ~~marked~~ cut and pasted on cards. They are the items to be treated for the XV century.

AFTERWORD

THE continuance of the War, which from 1915 to 1919 made visits to England impossible, has greatly delayed the publication of Part II of the Register, for it seemed inadvisable to put the volume through the press without opportunity to consult the manuscripts themselves. In the years which have intervened since the appearance of Part I some additional material has come to my notice, and this I have collected in the 'Further Addenda' at the beginning of the volume. After these pages had been put into type so that further insertions were out of the question, I learned, through the kindness of Sir Israel Gollancz, of the recent purchase by the British Museum of an important manuscript of prose and verse to the cost of which the friends of Dr. Henry B. Wheatley contributed in honour of his memory, and I note here the pieces of verse which it contains:

BM Addit. 39574 (The Wheatley MS.).

Marye modir wel þee be / Mary modir þinke on me.

In this connexion I desire to add also an itemized list of the pieces of verse in Longleat MS. 29, which has come to hand within the past fortnight, and for which I am indebted to the kindness of Miss Hope Allen. My own repeated efforts to secure access to the Longleat MSS. were unsuccessful, so that in my description of them in Part I, I was obliged to rely for the most part on the account published by the Historical Manuscripts Commission. The description which follows should be substituted for that given in Part I, at the bottom of page 473 and the top of page 474.

Longleat MS. 29.

Ihū þt hast me dere I-boght / Write þu gostly in my þogt.

Owing to the fact that Part II was already completely in page proof it has been impossible to insert in the Index of First Lines pieces of verse which turn up only in the Wheatley MS. or in Longleat 29. The pieces which have thus been denied their rightful place in the First Line Index are, the second, third, eighth, ninth, and tenth items in the Wheatley MS., and the sixth, ninth, and tenth items in Longleat 29.

The only other omission from the Index of First Lines, so far as I am aware, is the poem in Bodl. 3712 (see the 'Further Addenda'), to which Mr. H. H. E. Craster kindly directed my attention. I omitted it from the Index under the impression that it was merely a fragment, but after examining the MS. I am of the opinion that this piece of verse is complete as it stands, and that it should therefore have been given a place in the Index of First Lines.

Except for the omissions just noted, the reader will find all the known pieces of Middle English religious and didactic verse indexed alphabetically according to first lines, with a list of the manuscripts in which they are preserved.

The most obvious use of such a list will be in affording direction to those who are engaged in special researches, but it should also be of interest to the literary historian. Histories of literature hitherto have considered these poems almost wholly on the basis of their literary merit. But the judgements thus pronounced express, after all, the point of view of a later age; and to rate these poems according to an absolute standard, even if it were possible, would be only a part of the function of literary history. From another point of view the importance of a poem is to be measured by the popularity which it enjoyed in its own generation. And in determining the extent to which a given poem circulated lists of manuscripts supply the most trustworthy evidence.

From this point of view a considerable section of our material—including a few of the most notable pieces and a great deal that is worthless—may at once be set aside as ‘closet production’. To this class belong the poems of William of Shoreham, the hymns by William Herebert, the alliterative poems by the ‘Gawayne poet’, the hymns of James Ryman, the ‘Hymnal de tempore’ in BM Addit. 34193, and the songs and poems of John Audelay. Some few of the pieces in the Audelay MS., it is true, appear elsewhere, but as these in every case exhibit a lyrical facility of which Audelay was ordinarily quite incapable, I suspect that these pieces were merely copied by Audelay and that they are not to be credited to him. Among the ‘closet productions’ I should not hesitate to include also the series of moral pieces in Bodl. 1703, were it not for the very surprising appearance of a single stanza from one of these pieces on a fly-leaf in a Petworth MS.

AFTERWORD

The scrap on the Petworth fly-leaf supplies the only evidence that this series of poems ever circulated.

Turning now to poems which were copied repeatedly, we proceed in the following list to arrange them in the order of their popularity, as indicated by the number of manuscripts which survive. Due allowance must be made, of course, in any such comparison of individual pieces for the great difference between literary conditions in one period and those in another—as, for example, between those of the thirteenth and the fifteenth centuries—and also for the greater chance of survival in the case of manuscripts of a later period. But even allowing for the inequalities which necessarily enter into such a comparison the results yielded by this manuscript test of popularity are significant.

Following is a list of the religious and didactic poems which are preserved in more than seven manuscripts :

- | | |

12. 'Aryse erly, Serve god deuoutly'.
13. 'Wyth scharp þornes þat beth kene, Myn hede', etc.

When one passes on to pieces of verse represented by seven manuscripts or less the numbers rapidly increase: twenty-one poems occur in seven MSS.; thirty-three in six MSS.; thirty-five in five MSS.; sixty-six in four MSS.; one hundred and eight in three MSS.; and two hundred and thirty-seven appear in two MSS. only.

Not all the pieces of verse in the foregoing list owe their wide circulation to their own popularity. The single quatrain in the Speculum Ecclesie, for example, owes its preservation to the mere accident of being quoted by Archbishop Edmund Riche in a treatise which was many times copied, in Latin, French, and English versions. St. Godric's hymn to the Virgin, likewise, escaped oblivion only by being imbedded in Latin texts of the Life of that Saint. A similar explanation may be found for the large number of MSS. of the pieces of verse occurring in the Speculum Christiani and the Fasciculus Morum, though in the case of both of these treatises it is to be noted that the English verses were often excerpted and copied separately.

AFTERWORD

A somewhat surprising fact, which is brought out by thus ranking these pieces according to their manuscript circulation, is the precedence assumed by the longer poems—some of them of formidable proportions. If we bring together, for example, those poems which occur in thirty manuscripts or more, we find included in this select company the following long texts: The Pricke of Conscience, Piers Plowman, Hoccleve's De Regimine Principum, Lydgate's Life of Our Lady, Nassyngton's Speculum Vite, The South English Legendary, and Lydgate's Fall of Princes. A piece of more moderate length, though by no means a short poem, which belongs to this group is Burgh's 'Cato'. The only short poems, on the other hand (if we leave out of consideration the Speculum Ecclesie and the Speculum Christiani for the reasons given above) are Lydgate's 'Dietary' and 'Erthe upon Erthe'. When one considers that in those days of expensive vellum and parchment the short poem enjoyed a distinct advantage, in that it could be copied on a spare leaf or included in the numerous miscellanies and commonplace books, one cannot fail to be impressed by the vogue of the long poem.

Still more impressive, however, is the contrast which appears when the manuscript circulation of these religious and didactic poems is compared with that of the metrical romances. Among the Arthurian romances in Middle English, Libeus Desconus holds first place with six MSS.; next comes Arthour and Merlin with five MSS.; the Azwtyrs of Arthure is represented by only four MSS.; and no other Arthurian romance exists in more than two MSS. Nor do the non-Arthurian romances make a much better showing. Sir Isumbras and Seven Sages head the list with eight MSS.; Richard Coer de Lyon occurs in seven; Guy of Warwick and Bevis of Hanton, in six; Thomas of Erceldoune, Partenope of Blois, and Sir Degare, in five; Floris and Blanchefleur, Sir Eglamour, Secge of Troy, Alisaundre, and Amis and Amiloun, in four; King Horn, The Life of Alisaunder, and The Erl of Toulous are represented by only three manuscripts, while the larger number of Middle English romances survive in only two MSS., or even in one.

In the field of secular literature historical poems fared better on the whole than romances. Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle is preserved in twelve MSS., while of Lydgate's Troy Book there are seventeen MSS., and of his Siege of Thebes there are no less than twenty-two.

The mightiest name in Middle English literature is that of Chaucer, and of the Canterbury Tales no less than sixty-nine MSS. are listed ; but even this number shrinks when compared with the ninety-nine MSS. of the anonymous Pricke of Conscience. Next in order of popularity among Chaucer's works stands Troilus, but of this only seventeen MSS. survive. The second place among Middle English secular poems must be awarded to the Confessio Amantis, with some forty manuscripts. But it is a fair question whether, in the mind of the fourteenth-century reader, Gower's poem, constructed as it is upon the framework of the Seven Deadly Sins, would have been classified as a purely secular work. The underlying didactic purpose, which detracts from the modern reader's appreciation, may actually have commended the Confessio to its own generation.

Statistics exhibiting the comparative circulation of Middle English poems obviously have little, if any, value in determining their comparative excellence ; but they help us to estimate the relative influence which these poems exerted upon their own generation, and thus enable us to see this literature through the eyes of the age which produced it. Only through the authentic testimony thus supplied by the surviving manuscripts can we distinguish casual and exceptional accomplishment from the main currents of tendency.

The outstanding fact which emerges after assembling the evidence of the manuscripts is the relative importance, during the Middle English period, of religious and didactic poetry. Not only did it far exceed the secular production in bulk, but, as the manuscripts testify, it circulated more widely. We are thus brought to realize more clearly than ever that the dominating principle during the mediæval period was, Art for instruction's sake! Instruction in the Christian faith, in morals, in manners, in political duties and obligations, in national history and the history of antiquity—these were the ends to which the literature of that day was mainly devoted. Even the mediæval drama in its origin and its earlier development was employed to present the scenes of sacred history, and to enforce the lessons of the moralist.

We shall be less surprised at this prevailing didactic tone when we remember the close relation which existed between literature and learning in an age when letters were virtually the monopoly of the clerical profession. Songs were sung, no doubt, at the dances in the churchyards, and tales were told at the taverns, but these were not regarded as literature and were very rarely committed to writing. The materials for the history of Middle English literature, however, must necessarily be sought in written records, and the more completely the contents of these manuscripts are examined and listed the more overwhelming is seen to be the predominance of the religious and didactic verse.

* Both the 'expanded' Collections introduce confusion in their arrangement of the Ferial Gospels for Epiphany week. The heading 'Dom. infra Oct. Epiph.' stands in Vernon over the Gospel 'Vidit Ioh. Iesum venientem' and in Harley over the Gospel 'Venit Ihu a Galilea', though neither of these is properly a Dominical Gospel. Harley continues the confusion throughout the Epiphany season by dating each of the Sunday Gospels a week later than its proper position.
